

Being guided with Love

Miho Fukuda

When I was a child, there is no border between nature and me. At my birthday party of first grade kindergarten, I remember that everyone laughed at me when I said "I will become a butterfly when I grow up, because they can fly in the sky."

From childhood, I feel so energetic when someone has been pleased with my help. My father is an orthopedics doctor and he often told me happily that his patient appreciated him for releasing from pain. And my father also told me that doctor is a good job because they can help people, so I decided to become a doctor. I become a physician, and my first patient had got pancreas cancer. When his cancer found, it was too late and I saw the end of modern medicine and I faced with vanity. I talked with his families and we decided not tell him about his cancer. So he asked me everyday "Doc, do I get cancer?" and I answered " No, you don't get cancer." In such days, he passed away. An senior doctor said that physicians are gravediggers and I was so shocked. In fact, after that I encountered many patients' death, and I couldn't help wondering about why people are born and die. Death is beyond our control and never be under our control. I felt some holiness because death is a contract between someone and God. There was no sauce of energetic, because I couldn't feel that I helped people. The next 10 years, I was tortured by helpless.

I became thirty for the reason why people got sick. It was an emotion from the deep part of my heart. I went to graduate school to study the cause of illness and studied gene, but there was no answer. I thought there must be a universal law beyond birth, aging, illness, and death. So I read enormous numbers of books concerning every kind. I want a consolation, so I meditated, trained Chi-gong and learned several kinds of healings all over the world. I decided to quit the graduate school many times. I broke my spine, got autonomic imbalance and I finally graduated after a couple of half year stopping outs. At that time I experienced many supernatural happenings and they affected my life. One of them was a near-death experience.

One day in the afternoon, I lay down and meditated. Suddenly intuitive information said that it's time to conquer the fear of death and I couldn't breathe. After struggling from fear and suffering, my consciousness changed into another level and I was in a silent darkness. And then I smelled some fragrance I've never had like a floral scent around me. I felt some existence. They were my dead patients who came to see me. Their souls all said that "It was so fun to meet you my last time of life. Thank you so much at that time." I was really surprised!

At that moment, I experienced an equal world, there was no being patients and doctor, and there was just happiness for souls meeting a soul. Then I moved from darkness to light, my body was surrounded with light. I met people's souls who I know now above a cloud made of light. They were all angels there. Everyone looked like to be guided and given life to help universe and earth.

Now I'd like to tell you is conviction that when we feel it's worst time of life or everything abandon us, the fact is that we are guided to realize they are lessons for spirituality. I'd like to live my best life sharing fun and joy with everyone. Thank you.
